Dr. Dan's Bio

I first got interested in medicine in Benin, Africa in 1997 during a vaccination mission with the U.S. Army (see the documentary videos below). I have since been honorably discharged and earned a Pre-Med Biology Degree from the University of Texas at Tyler. As a “non-traditional” Pre-Med, I had many lessons to learn the hard way – starting with why I didn’t get into medical school the first year I applied.

Upon graduation from medical school, I received the Bronze Award from the Admissions Department for my volunteer premedical advising work. In Houston I developed a comprehensive DVD kit for premedical students, which is now a target of research by the National Institutes of Health.

As an intern in Emergency Medicine, I began podcasting American Medical Student Association's Pre-Med Chapter at the University of Houston and later helped get AMSA's Mastermind Program off the ground.

Now, I am conducting a national research project to benefit medically underserved communities. Medical students and premedical students from all backgrounds are being enrolled. We are studying careers and tendencies to work in physician shortage areas.

The Medical School Podcast recruits cooperative companies that provide products and services to benefit students throughout their medical education journey.
